Bitmap A _bitmap_ file format is a raster file format. If you look closely at a digital photograph, you may notice that it consists of a grid or a series of dots, pixels, or pixels per square inch (ppi). Each of these dots is an individual pixel, and they form the dots that make up the picture you see on your monitor or your printer. The ppi (pixels per inch) of a monitor or printer tells you how closely the image appears to be printed. The ppi number is usually listed in the information box on the bottom of the monitor or printer. With a bitmap file, you can put whatever image you want on a monitor or printer. The downside to a bitmap file is that it may not be suitable for publication. As the actual pixels on a bitmap file are shown in an "as is" format, a print company may prefer a vector file format because a printed image can be made larger or smaller without causing noticeable quality reduction. The more pixels in the image, the less detail the final printed image will contain. In addition, each individual pixel is usually quite small — usually a dot or a square about 1 pixel in area. To print an image that includes a lot of fine detail, it's better to downsample the image before exporting it as a bitmap.

Saturday, 1 July 2017 Being a blogger and a crafter, I thought I'd share a little something with you today. I hope I don't get too foolish or self-indulgent in this post because I can be very humble. I know some of you are probably thinking 'How could someone be humble?' Well that is because you haven't met my hubby! My hubby is a man of many accomplishments and so is my daughter. I have no doubt that I'm certainly not the most beautiful woman in the world, but that is because of hubby's wonderful eyes! After all, he chose me in the end. So, as most of you probably know, I'm a blog junkie, a crafter and also very self-confessed colour victim! I love making up my own embellishments and I love learning new things, but when it comes to pinks, I'm always a victim. Knowing that I love pinks, hubby spent a whole afternoon with me last week, showing me what he had in store for the wedding. He always does his research and I always get comments and messages from all over the UK, saying 'You are the most posh girl in Britain! Do you have an official website?' But I'm not even complaining because we're together, enjoying life, doing things together, having fun and enjoying each other's company. I think I pretty much keep him on this planet! Anyway, I've got a little collection of pink items to share with you. There is a little book with a bookmark and an album of my bridesmaid's gifts. Both so pretty. Next, I have some gorgeous two-inch ruffled papers from Jillibean Soup for my cards. I'm trying to remind myself not to get too carried away! Last but not least, I have a small collection of some of my recent purchases. All of these are from Jillibean Soup, but not only that, some of the products are made in the UK and some in Australia. They are all gorgeous items and I'm very excited to use them all over the wedding season. I'm also going to be doing lots of tutorials and sharing some ideas. Have you ever thought about how you could use pinks in a different way? Let me know in the comments section. I also have to thank

Q: Determine a decomposition of a triangle which is symmetric in the bases Here is a question from an old book: Let $SABC$ be a triangle, and let SD be a point on BC such that AD is perpendicular to BC . Let M be the midpoint of AB and let N be the midpoint of AC . Determine a decomposition of $SABC$ into triangles, each of which is symmetric in the bases. Now I know that the exterior angle bisectors are the lines joining the midpoints of opposite sides. But I do not know how to apply them here. Am I misunderstanding the question? Or is there a direct solution? Thanks for any helps. A: Draw AM and BN , and AM perpendicular to BN . First build AM and BN so that AM is perpendicular to BN and $AM=BN$. Then cut AM by BN at P . That gives you $AP=BP$ and $AM=BN$. Then AP is parallel to BN . Now cut AM by BN at P . That gives you AP parallel to BN . And AM is parallel to BN .
